Dear Brenda

Here's the stuff they "didn't serve" on me, and the list I promised you.

I have some questions:

1. I did a quick calculation assuming (worst case) that Lorita stayed on welfare continuously for 12 years. I don't expect that to happen, but the answer came out close to $100,000. If that's accurate, it makes me a little nervous. Might a really big lien snap them out of their lethargy, and motivate them to take my house away from me? Should I do something like homesteading the place? (Whatever that means.)
2. Perhaps I'm being foolish, and you may correct me if I'm wrong, but I have this opinion that if I fail to object to their judgment, I'll be in effect consenting to it. I take my obligations very seriously, and I don't want to feel obligated in this case. Might a written objection to the judgment provoke them to pursue me more fiercely than would normally be the case? How bullet-proof is their apathy?
3. May I have one of your business cards?

I appreciate your help, and I'm prepared to pay you for the trouble you've taken for me. Please let me know if you decide that's appropriate.

Sincerely,
