

Police State

by

Sam Aurelius Milam III
c/o 4984 Peach Mountain Drive
Gainesville, Georgia 30507

This essay was first completed on Monday, April 29, 2024.

This document is approximately 454 words long.

Other essays in this collection are available in Pharos.

This essay is LiteraShare.

That means that it isn't for sale and that it isn't protected by a formal establishment copyright. As the author, I ask you to extend to me the courtesy that is reasonably due. If you copy the essay, then copy all of it including my name and address as shown on each page, and this LiteraShare Statement. I invite you to provide such copies for other readers. If you quote from the essay, then do so accurately and give me credit. If you care to make a voluntary contribution to me, then I prefer cash. For checks, money orders, or PayPal Payments, please inquire.

caveat lector

This page was intentionally left blank.

The fourteenth amendment to the U.S. constitution provides that a citizen is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. The dictionaries inform us that jurisdiction means power and control. So, they lied to us in the regulated government schools when they told us that the citizens control the government. The citizens don't control the government. They're under its jurisdiction. They're controlled by the government.

In the United States, there are three categories of behavior. Those categories are required behavior, prohibited behavior, and regulated behavior. If the government catches a citizen failing to engage in required behavior, then the government will punish that citizen. If the government catches a citizen engaging in prohibited behavior, then the government will punish that citizen. If the government catches a citizen engaging in regulated behavior contrary to the regulations, then the government will punish that citizen.

If a citizen refuses to submit to the punishment, then the government will initiate the use of force against that citizen, to compel him to submit to the punishment. If he resists the use of force, then the government will escalate the use of force. If he continues to resist the use of force, then the government will continue to escalate the use of force. It will continue to do so, without limit, until either the citizen submits to the punishment, or the citizen is dead.

In consideration of such circumstances and consequences that are inherent in citizenship in the United States, one thing is absolutely clear. Citizenship must necessarily be voluntary. If it isn't voluntary, if people are compelled to be citizens by force, fraud, deception, manipulation, misrepresentation, coercion, or by any other method, then the involuntary nature of such citizenship reveals that the United States is an authoritarian, dictatorial police state.

This page was intentionally left blank.